Who We Are

At Cornerstone we believe in
"Financial Solutions Through Education"

Cornerstone is an independent financial association that shares common core values and abide by a defined case split: find, mind, and grind. We are a team-oriented organization, that hosts value based educational workshops to encourage clients to make an educated decision about their finances. We use a team approach on how we market in order to obtain clients. We protect families from sudden deaths so we don't have to see another go fund me.

We protect families from cancer, stroke, heart attack, and other unexpected tragedies. We protect families from running out of money in retirement. We protect families for overpaying for college. That's what we do, and we do it with conviction. People don't buy what we do, they buy why we do it. Welcome to The Cause.

CLIENT TOUCHPOINT PARTNERS

Follow-up System for Success

Here at Cornerstone we believe that the follow-up process is just as important as the journey we take people on to become a client. Now we are not saying this process is set in stone nor the vendors we partner with to accomplish our goals in the follow-up process. What we are saying is that you need to have a great system that keeps you top of mind post implementation to build proper walls around your client. Below is our blueprint below:

Reminder Media

This partner is fantastic for sending both digital and hard copy reading material branded to fit your organization. Cornerstone believes that this resource is great for clients to see your face, leave around their home for friends and family to see, and as a touchpoint to garner more referrals. Reminder media can be set up with a minimal investment and your point of contact is:

FMG Suite

This drip and media specialist enhances your ability to touch your clients most frequently. They will partner with you to create a drip email campaign to keep your clients informed on political and economic conditions, give you birthday and anniversary reminders, as well as direct access to your calendar for clients whose needs change before your annual review.

Cornerstone Financial Associates:

Who We Serve

Middle-Middle America

Cornerstone is the Industry Leading advocate for Middle-Middle America. We believe that the wealthy people get taken care of by everyone. They have advisors and firms lining up outside to help them organize their large portfolios and funds.

The other side of that spectrum are the poor people or those who may not have acted with financial diligence throughout their life or been delt a bad hand in one way or another. This group of people gets supported by the government and rightly so, we should be helping these individuals who have helped our country move forward over their lifetime.

Finally, we are left with Middle-Middle America, who really doesn't get served and supported properly. They are inundated with forceful messages, shady sales pitches, and misinformation. We at Cornerstone are here to be an advocate to help serve Middle-Middle America.

We will do this through helping to educate them on strategies and solutions that will support their goals and dreams. "Financial Solutions Through Education" is our tagline here at Cornerstone. We have the tools and training to properly walk our clients through a non-invasive process that will empower and encourage them to make the best decisions for themselves and their legacies.

"Middle-Middle America needs the support of Advisors with the right values, the right resources, at the right time, for the right reasons!"

~ Robert Belcuore, Founder of Cornerstone

Cornerstone Local Lead Philosophy

Cornerstone's philosophy is finding every resource we can, standing with integrity, to find the clients that need our help most. While we offer partnerships with a variety of lead sources, the most important message we want to convey is "Spending vs Investing".

We believe that it is foundational to your success to invest in the tools and resources to propel your business forward. It is not simply spending money in hopes of a return. You must INVEST in your business by partnering with vendors that will continually keep your pipeline full to achieve the Cornerstone Critical Success Factors of 8-10 appts per week.

Investing is a mindset you need in your business to properly track, engage, and implement the proper systems to incrementally grow your organization. As you have seen there are many avenues we have laid out to acquire new clients, so invest in your success today!

Center of Influence "Who you Know"

Mindset

Here at Cornerstone, we believe that any advisors success truly starts in building good relationships. So many times we focus on the ones we have or even the road ahead. Yet most of the time we tend to forget those relationships and bridges we had built over time throughout our life. The COI (Circle of Influence) is one of the greatest assets you will ever have as an advisor. For this reason we have made it our first lead strategy to help you deploy.

Where to Begin

In the pages to follow you will find a very helpful Memory Jogger form and a Top 25 worksheet. List your top 25 COI's. These are people you know, who would be interested in helping you grow your business but not necessarily to sell policies to. While we believe you should still serve them and protect them if you can, your main goal with your COIs is to gain introductions to other people. These are usually people who have a large network of friends or are influential people; most importantly they know you well and like you.

Limiting Beliefs

A philosophy we stand on here at Cornerstone is that we are all like-minded individuals that have common values and work on a defined case split. Most of us, our minds race thinking of those in our past that may be a COI and say things like; "they will never help me", "they probably don't remember me", "why would they want to?". Well first that is a limiting belief and second our philosophy takes all the pressure away from you and allows an Experienced Advisor here at Cornerstone support you. They will build you up, teach you the process, and show you the true value of teamwork.

Road to Licensing

1

Complete a pre-licensing course that has been approved by the Department of Insurance. Once you have completed your course, Xcel Solutions will issue a certificate of completion which you may download and print from your on-line Xcel Solutions account.

2

Schedule your exam with your state's testing provider, PSI. Registration can be completed most efficiently by signing up online at PSI. You may also schedule over the phone at (800) 733-9267. Your exam may be taken at a physical PSI examination center or via a remote online proctored exam. Exam fees must be paid at the time of reservation. To cancel your exam, you must contact PSI Exams at least two days in advance or forfeit your registration fee.

3

Some states require all individual applicants for an insurance license to submit fingerprints and written consent for a criminal history check. The Department recommends scheduling your fingerprinting scan immediately after passing the licensing exam. Schedule your appointment on-line with IdentoGo or by phone at 1-877-503-5981. Upon your appointment, you must present the appropriate and completed Universal Form and proper identification.

Road to Licensing

4

Apply for your license. We recommend using the on-line application service at www.nipr.com. Additional licensing application guidance may be accessed on the NIPR website.

Maintain your license by being aware of your continuing education requirements. Most insurance licenses must be maintained by completing a certain number of credit hours of continuing education each licensing period. Xcel Solutions offers continuing education courses that will help you comply with your state's requirements. Click here to view your state's education rules and stay on top of your license.

You must register for the test within 2 weeks!

Protection Red Partnership Agreement

This commission agreement is between _____ AND Protection Red/Blue.

Gross & Minimum Commissions: Protection Red gets 10% on all business. 20% goes to the finder of the case regardless if its an individual, Police Station, Fire department or Municipality. 50% goes the person closing the case and 20% goes to the person doing the grind on the case (Paperwork, follow up, booking the meetings, Being the point of contact) (Cost of the association or any bills that stem for it will be a 3 way cost. Kevin, Lewis, Finder)

To get the full 30% on a find, whatever the association cost or bills that stem from that department will have to be paid by the finder.

FIND of a FIND (2nd layer): If a department head introduces us to another department which stemmed from a connection of a center of influence the following commission split would be Protection Red 10% on all business, 10% goes to the finder. (the cost will have to be split 3 ways. Kevin, Lewis, Finder)

FIND of a FIND of a FIND (3RD layer): if a head refers to another head of the department and that head refers to another head there will be no commission. At this point the work was done by the advisors on the team to establish that relationship.

This agreement and the terms thereof, are applicable to any future business under Protection Red,(now or in the future).

Social Security Seminars

Track - Acquire Up

2025

Here at Cornerstone one of the Critical Success Factors we encourage advisors to implement is a Social Security Seminar. Cornerstone has partnered with White Glove to assist you in running these seminars. The seminar is presented by Robert Belcuore, Cheryl Crawford, and Diane Goldman. They educate clients on topics such as:

- When to claim Social Security and why
- How Medicare could affect your retirement income
- Bring light to the process of how we support our clients through an action plan to meet their retirement goals and avoid common risks in retirement.
- Can they fill the GAP with their Qualified funds to maximize their Social Security Benefits.

The presentation will educate your prospects with much needed and not widely talked about information to retire with dignity. We have partnered as mentioned above with White Glove to help each advisor run these workshops every quarter. White Glove has been in the Webinar/Marketing space since 2015 and was built by advisors for advisors.

Alexandra Carol is the Senior Executive Marketing Consultant for White Glove and Cornerstone; she will be your direct contact for learning all White Glove has to offer.

Make sure to schedule your call with her once you have completed Cornerstone University. It is also encouraged to put a game plan together with Cornerstone Leadership to ensure a successful launch to your White Glove Seminar

Cornerstone Bonus Points Calculations

CPC Points – CPC is the point system that we will use to measure each advisor's individual production throughout the year. Here is a simple example of how to calculate your CPC points:

Life Target Premium

Life Target Premium is a 1 to 1 calculation

Example: $10k in life Target Premium = 10,000 pts

Life Premium Excess

If there is excess life premium put towards a policy, either 1035 exchange or overfunding a policy, the excess points will be calculated once a month and added to your YTD life premium numbers.

Annuities
(Including
Variable
Annuities)

Annuity business will be calculated at 10% of total Annuity money rolled

Example: $500,000 Annuity x 10% = 50,000 pts

Brokers, who are going to be absent for more than one day, should contact their supervisor on each day of their absence. Cornerstone Independent Brokerage reserves the right to ask for a physician's statement in the event of a long-term illness (three consecutive days), or multiple illnesses or injuries.

If an Broker fails to notify their supervisor after three consecutive days of absence, Cornerstone Independent Brokerage will presume that the Broker has voluntarily resigned. Cornerstone Independent Brokerage will review any extenuating circumstances that may have prevented the Broker from calling in before they are removed from payroll.

Should undue or recurrent absence and tardiness become apparent, the Broker will be subject to disciplinary action, up to and including termination of employment. This policy is not intended to restrict an Broker's right to discuss, or act together to improve, wages, benefits and working conditions with co-workers or in any way restrict Brokers' rights under the National Labor Relations Act.

Certain absences may be protected by federal, state, and/or local law. If you have questions about this policy or your entitlement to time off, contact the CFO.

THE INSURANCE INDUSTRY JURISDICTION

A Historical Perspective: State vs. Federal Jurisdiction

Insurance is truly a big industry, representing a great deal of cash and cash flow in our economy. As such, the insurance industry is a highly regulated industry. The interesting question is whether the individual states or the federal government should have jurisdiction over the insurance industry. This question has been actively debated for many, many years.

Case law on this debate goes back over 130 years. If insurance is defined to be "interstate commerce," then Congress has the right to regulate; if not, then the states have that authority. In 1868, in the case of Paul v. Virginia, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 168 (1868), it was held that insurance is not commerce. In 1944, in U.S. v. South-Eastern Underwriters Association, 322 U.S. 533 (1944), it was held that insurance is commerce, and basically interstate commerce at that.

Only a year later, in 1945, Congress passed the McCarran-Ferguson Act. It was entitled "An Act to Express the Intent of Congress with Reference to the Regulation of the Business of Insurance." The new law made two things clear: the business of insurance would still be subject to the laws of various states, and Congress would retain certain powers that could be exercised if, after a period of adjustment, the business was not regulated by state law. In addition, the insurance industry enjoys a limited antitrust exemption. Federal law does not apply to the business of insurance except to the extent it is not regulated by state law. Most states have enacted laws covering rate making, unfair trade practices, and antitrust laws for insurers and have appointed or elected state Insurance Commissioners to regulate that industry within the state; therefore, the individual states can, and do, regulate the insurance industry, with Congress reserving the right to step in for cause in the future.

In January 2021, President Trump signed the "Competitive Health Insurance Reform Act of 2020." This eliminated the antitrust exemption for health and dental insurers and added a layer of federal oversight to the existing state-based framework.

STATE REGULATION

How do states regulate insurance? There are generally three bodies that have input: the courts; the legislatures; and the administrative agencies (insurance departments). The courts are charged with interpreting statutes and deciding conflicts between policy provisions and the "public good." The legislatures enact statutes and the administrative agencies draft regulations to guide people on following the statutes. The insurance departments have a number of functions: the licensing of companies, agents, and brokers; the approval of policy forms and rates; company solvency issues and periodic exams; rehabilitation and/or liquidation of failed insurers; and addressing consumer complaints against companies and agents.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INSURANCE COMMISSIONERS (NAIC)

Although there are many parties involved in supervising life insurance sales and business activities, life insurance is first regulated at the state level by state insurance commissioners. Each state, along with the District of Columbia and U.S. territories, has an insurance commissioner and they collectively belong to the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, also called the NAIC. The National Association of Insurance Commissioners was formed in 1871. It was originally called the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners. At that time, the NAIC tried to draft and enact model laws to regulate rates, standardize policy forms, and provide for fair trade practices. Since that time, the Insurance Commissioners of the respective states have established state agencies that dictate which insurance carriers may sell products in their states, approve which products are acceptable to be sold in their states, and regulate the contracting, education, and licensing of persons permitted to sell products in their states. Every state has its own parameters and review processes.

THE INSURANCE INDUSTRY JURISDICTION

Consumers also have access to the NAIC's resources through online tools. Consumers can use these resources to research whether an insurance company has had any enforcement actions or other fines or issues. The NAIC and state commissioners protect consumers by regulating the following life insurance business practices:

- INSURANCE LICENSING - Life insurance companies and financial professionals must be licensed and contracted to write insurance in the states where they intend to conduct business. This includes a resident license in the state where they are domiciled, and a non-resident license in states where they will be writing cases for clients who live in other states - in other words, all states where they intend to conduct business. Those financial professionals and firms who fail to comply with various state insurance laws and regulations are subject to fines and license suspension or revocation.

- CONTINUING EDUCATION - Financial professionals who write insurance products must also participate in continuing education programs to ensure professional standards are being upheld. Each state will have guidelines around continuing education which involves a specific number of continuing education hours that must be completed every few years to maintain their license. Failure to properly submit and document continuing education will result in a loss of license and the inability to submit cases. Most states have an online portal where consumers and BGAs can check the status of a financial professional's insurance license and insurance history.

- PRODUCT REGULATION - Each state insurance commissioner will review and oversee the products offered by life insurance companies, including term insurance, permanent insurance, and other product lines in their state. Insurance carriers are allowed to set premium levels as appropriate, and while regulators do not set premiums for carriers, each state will monitor those practices to make sure the benefits consumers are receiving are commensurate with the premiums being charged. Carriers must file new products, riders, or other benefits with their state insurance commissioner. Similarly, any changes that affect existing or new policyholders must also be filed with their state insurance commissioner for approval.

THE INSURANCE INDUSTRY JURISDICTION

• FINANCIAL RESERVES - The NAIC and state regulators will also monitor the financial reserves of insurance carriers. Periodic financial examinations of carriers occur on a scheduled basis. State financial examiners investigate an insurance company's accounting methods, procedures, and financial statements. These exams validate whether the company is in good financial standing. When an examination of financial records shows the insurance company to be financially troubled, the state insurance commissioner takes control of the company. Aggressively working with financially at-risk insurance companies is a critical part of the state insurance regulator's role. In the event an insurance company must be liquidated or becomes insolvent, the states maintain a system of financial guaranty funds that cover consumers' personal losses.

• MARKET REGULATION - Market regulation is another way insurance commissioners help protect consumers. Regulators will look at the broad marketplace of insurance carriers and practices to make sure consumers are being charged fair and reasonable insurance premiums, and that products and trade practices are fair and balanced. Market conduct examinations are used to make sure insurance companies and agents are following proper sales practices that otherwise might trigger complaints against an insurer. These exams review licensing issues, complaints, types of products sold by the company and agents, agent sales practices, underwriting ratings, claims handling, and other market-related aspects of an insurer's operation. When violations are found, the insurance commissioner makes recommendations to improve the company's operations and to bring the company into compliance with state laws. Additionally, a company may be subject to civil penalties, license suspension, or revocation if they are not following established regulations.

OTHER REGULATORS

While the National Association of Insurance Commissioners focuses on regulation standards and market conduct on a state-by-state basis, there are other regulatory bodies that monitor life insurance depending on the type of product. For example, state insurance commissioners have primary authority over insurance products that are not considered investment or securities products. These are often called "fixed" products, meaning there is not a securities component to the product. For products where there is a securities component or risk, such as variable life insurance or variable annuity products, other regulatory bodies will be involved in monitoring the market conduct of companies and financial professionals who represent and write variable products. These regulatory bodies include:

THE INSURANCE INDUSTRY JURISDICTION

FINANCIAL INDUSTRY REGULATORY AUTHORITY (FINRA) -The first additional regulatory body includes the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority or FINRA. FINRA regulates companies and financial professionals who sell securities, mutual funds, stocks, bonds, and other securities sold via commission or other product-specific compensation. This includes the suitability and sale of variable life insurance and variable annuity products. They may also oversee indexed universal life insurance products.

Variable life insurance products are offered through broker/dealers and FINRA oversees the practices of broker/dealers and broker/dealer representatives. FINRA monitors licensing, product suitability, advertising practices for variable products, training, continuing education requirements, and consumer disclosures regarding investment products prior to purchase. In other words, they help to ensure fair financial and investment markets for the protection of consumers. Since variable life and annuity products are sold through a broker/dealer; these products and sales practices are regulated by FINRA, in addition to state regulators. Representing variable products means you are bound to following state insurance regulatory guidelines but also FINRA guidelines and examinations.

To help educate consumers, FINRA offers individuals the opportunity to look up an affiliated broker or registered representative through their online BrokerCheck® portal. BrokerCheck® is part of FINRA's ongoing efforts to help investors make informed choices about the brokers and brokerage firms through which they may wish to do business, as well as to provide the public with access to information about formerly registered brokers. This will include a report for the last 10 years that summarizes an affiliated broker's credentials and qualifications, licenses, current and prior employment history, disclosures regarding client disputes, disciplinary actions, criminal history, bankruptcies, and more. Information made available through FINRA's BrokerCheck® is populated from the Central Registration Depository (also called the CRD®). The CRD collects information from a broker's registration and licensing forms that they are required to complete. In addition, regulators report information to the CRD regarding certain disciplinary events involving brokers and brokerage firms.

THE INSURANCE INDUSTRY JURISDICTION

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION (SEC) -This regulatory body further oversees securities products and the practices of Registered Investment Advisers (RIAs). Registered Investment Advisers are entities that provide investment advice or financial planning services for a fee. Clients of an RIA pay a fee directly to the RIA for services such as investment management or financial advice. The mission of the SEC is to protect investors; maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and facilitate capital formation. The SEC is primarily concerned with protecting investors and consumers against investment fraud. As part of the SEC's oversight, there is the Office of Insurance Products (OIP). This division is responsible for the regulation of variable insurance. Depending on the assets under management or nature of the investment advice offered by an RIA, the RIA may be regulated by their state vs. the SEC directly.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE - The insurance industry is of significant importance to the economy; therefore, we will also discuss the role of The Federal Reserve. The responsibilities of the Federal Reserve include influencing the supply of money and credit in the U.S. economy. It further regulates and supervises financial institutions, serves as a banking and fiscal agent for the U.S. government and monitors banks, credit unions, and savings and loans. As such, the Federal Reserve is a consolidated supervisor of some insurers. The Federal Reserve participates together with state insurance supervisors, the NAIC, and the Federal Insurance Office (FIO) in the setting of international insurance processes. Many of the internal cash values of permanent insurance policies offered through carriers are heavily dependent on changes to interest rates made by The Federal Reserve.

INSURANCE LICENSING

- STATE LICENSING - When a financial professional wishes to write insurance or annuities or participate in the compensation of these transactions, they will need to pass their state life and/or health insurance exam for licensing. Further, if the financial professional wishes to write insurance cases in a state where they are not domiciled, they will also need to secure a non-resident insurance license. If you or your firm will be completing an application directly with a client, or on behalf of a financial professional, you will need to have an insurance license.

- SECURITIES LICENSES/ VARIABLE PRODUCTS - Anyone who sells or writes variable life insurance policies or variable annuity contracts is required to have a securities license through FINRA, in addition to an insurance license. This includes the Series 6 (investment company and variable contracts representative license) and the Series 63 (multistate license, also referred to as "Blue Sky Laws") or the Series 7 (general securities representative license). In addition, the person needs to affiliate with a FINRA licensed broker/dealer. Some broker/dealers also require a registered representative to secure a securities license if they are writing indexed universal life policies.

- SELLING AGREEMENTS - Selling agreements are important because a registered representative of one broker/dealer cannot sell variable contracts through another broker/dealer unless (1) such broker-dealer is a FINRA member, and (2) there is sales or selling agreement in effect between the parties. Some RIAs and financial advisors may not earn a commission on insurance products, instead, they may charge a fee for insurance advice. This may require an insurance license, depending on their state, along with other RIA licensing requirements.

Licensing is a crucial component that a BGA helps manage for its affiliated financial professionals. When writing an insurance policy, your firm must confirm if the financial professional is currently licensed with the appropriate insurance carrier in the state where the case was sold. If not, that professional needs to be. It is not usually a long process, but your firm will want to avoid any delays in getting commissions paid, and commissions cannot be paid to a non-licensed professional.

Usually, the process of licensing and appointing a financial professional with an insurance company takes place concurrently with the underwriting of the case, though some companies wait until the case is ready to be placed before they incur the cost of licensing the individual. This is just a simple reflection of placement ratios: not all issued cases get placed by the writing professional, but the insurance departments do keep every fee sent to them. Some states have laws that require financial professionals to be appointed by the company before presenting a proposal or taking an application. Still, others require that a professional be appointed before a commission is paid. It is important to know the licensing regulations which apply in each state in which your BGA transacts business.

Telephone and Email Etiquette

Your contact with financial professionals, clients and/or carrier home offices may involve several communication methods. As easy and efficient as an email might be for communication, there is a personal touch that comes with using the telephone.

THE RIGHT PRACTICES FOR USING THE TELEPHONE

There will be times when it is more important to call a Client or a carrier vs. relying on email. For example:

- If a person seems angry on an email or has an upset tone, pick up the phone and call them.
- If a case has been declined by an underwriter or comes back "other than applied for," you need to deliver this news to the financial professional and/or client by phone to discuss options. The financial professional may have illustrated the case more favorably, and you need to call them, not just to let them know the case came back "other than applied for," but also to talk through options with the case.
- Surprises or unexpected findings during the underwriting process. For example, the carrier may have identified alcohol or drug use in the client's blood work or urine test, and they are asking for an alcohol questionnaire. This should be discussed over the phone with the Client.
- You want to call more frequently if the financial professional (Grinder or Finder) or their assistant is new and is getting used to your processes. They may need more explanations and training.
- To explain complex issues or requirements. If it will take more time to type out an explanation regarding a case issue or requirement due to the complexity of it, pick up the phone. Chances are, if you send an email, it will result in the financial professional having questions and additional emails. A phone call can alleviate a back-and-forth exchange over email or frustrations that can occur as a result of explaining complex issues or requirements.
- There is a general rule: call the client or the carrier if they are not responding to your emails. If you have sent the same email more than once, pick up the phone and call them.
- If a financial professional or client is not responding to your calls or emails, you may need to let them know you will have to close the case if they do not respond back to you by a certain time.

Telephone and Email Etiquette

EFFECTIVE TELEPHONE USE

The telephone is a key factor in fostering a relationship of trust and mutual respect. In this discussion, we will review some of the personal qualities that will help you effectively and efficiently use the telephone for conducting business.

• ABILITY TO ASK QUESTIONS - Confidently asking questions is the only way to ensure you understand a person's situation and needs. The same is true in your dealings with the home office. Whether on the phone or in person, asking appropriate questions can be the quickest way to get the information you need to effectively do your job. If you are unsure about something or want to clarify a point, just ask. It is important not to guess when an answer could be as simple as a telephone call away. Do not worry about bothering the client or appearing to not know what you are doing. Asking questions shows people you want to do your job well.

• ABILITY TO LISTEN - Listening is critical to understanding. Likewise, understanding is critical to providing exceptional service to others and to being responsive to the needs of your clients and partner advisors.

• EMPATHY - The most important function of Cornerstone is to be of service to the financial professionals and clients who come to us for their insurance needs. The best way we can be of service is to understand and appreciate a person's situation, perspective, and needs. Empathy is just that: mentally and emotionally being able to put ourselves in another person's situation. This is symbolic of the individualized attention Cornerstone provides to financial professionals and insurance companies as well as their clients.

• THICK SKIN - Sometimes things can be said by a financial professional, contact at the home office, or a client that really hits a tender spot with us. Naturally, there is a temptation to react in a defensive manner. Resist the temptation to do so in every instance. Not only will defensive reactions portray a lack of personal professionalism; they can endanger the important relationship Cornerstone strives to maintain with its clients and insurance companies. Adopt those intellectual mechanisms that help you respond civilly to challenging or offensive situations. One effective way to do this is through self-talk. For example, you might simply tell yourself that you are being paid to be understanding. That, plus a dose of selfdiscipline, will help you control how you respond in moments of conflict or anger.

TELEPHONE TECHNIQUES

Chances are you have already mastered the personality traits that will aid you in using the telephone to do your job. If you had not, you probably would not be reading this manual as a new advisor! This section outlines a number of very basic, but helpful, telephone etiquette techniques that will help you in your daily job function, including:

- Speak directly into the mouthpiece. Do not rely on the speakerphone because it is easy. You also want to avoid speakerphones in times of discretion.
- Identify yourself immediately.
- Check the volume, speed, and clarity of your voice. For example, if a caller asks you to repeat something, it may be an indication you are speaking too softly, too quickly, or too indistinctly.
- Allow yourself to pause. If you want to stress a point, pause after you have said it. If the other person is taking notes on something you say, you should anticipate the time it takes and pause when you think it is appropriate. Or simply ask, "If you are taking notes, let me know if I am speaking too fast."
- Be positive. Try to avoid negative words such as "We don't," or "I can't." Instead say, "Here is what we can do for you."
- Try to let the caller hang up first. Not only is this polite; it gives the caller a final chance to ask a question or add a comment.
- Be careful not to make promises that could create unrealistic expectations. Reliability, rather than over-promising, gives you credibility.
- Take your time; do not be hurried. Take as much time as you need to get or give the information you require and make sure it is accurately received.
- Avoid distractions. Do not let others in the office distract you. If someone insists on talking to you, excuse yourself, place the call on hold, and return to the call as soon as possible. Express your regrets to the caller and continue.
- Develop your listening skills.
- Give the caller your full attention.
- Be prepared with everything you need before placing the call. Have your files or notes ready beforehand.
- Do not interrupt unless it is important to do so. Also, a pause does not always mean the other person has finished saying everything they wanted to say.
- Make interjections. An occasional "yes," or "I see," shows the person or home office employee you are still with them and that you understand what is being said.
- Listen for overtones. Quite often, the tone of someone's voice will tell you things their words do not.
- Take notes. This allows you to wait to interject a comment or ask a question and helps you keep the details of the conversation in perspective.

The Importance of Field Underwriting

Field Underwriting is what the financial professional and your partners should do before submitting a formal application. It helps facilitate the most advantageous underwriting outcome. In most cases, the writing professional is the only person in contact with the applicant. They are the eyes and ears of the underwriter because they are able to observe the applicant and related parties.

Collecting data about a proposed insured's known risks is an important step in the field underwriting process prior to formally submitting a life insurance application. Field underwriting allows the underwriter to better assess a proposed insured's medical history and help determine what underwriting classification a person will qualify for. The writing professional's ability to ask preliminary questions about current or past medical history, financial circumstances or avocations and lifestyle are crucial in steering a case to the right carrier. They are also able to help prepare their client for the underwriting process.

During field underwriting, you are helping to uncover pre-existing conditions that may adversely affect an applicant's risk class or rating prior to submitting the case. Knowing the risks and severity in advance helps you best shop a case to the right carrier, which expedites underwriting, decreases case cycle times, and increases placement ratios.

PLACEMENT RATIOS AND CASE CYCLE TIMES

Placement ratio in the insurance industry refers to the ratio of cases submitted to placed. If cases do not get issued or placed in force because of poor field underwriting or other factors, then the client is not insured, and the financial professional, and Cornerstone, do not get paid for their efforts. Further, the proposed insured may have a decline on their MIB for insurance.

PLACEMENT RATIO - In regard to placement ratios, insurance carriers are looking at financial professionals and Cornerstone as either profitable or not profitable parts of their distribution force. Cornerstone also looks at the business being submitted by financial professionals to see if it is profitable. Cases that are not placed are not profitable for anyone involved. The industry average of cases that are not placed is between 25 and 35 percent.

CASE CYCLE TIMES/ CASE LIFE CYCLE -The second key performance indicator is the number of days in the Case Life Cycle. This is often very dependent on the type of application submission process used and staying on top of all requirements. If cases are submitted with Drop Tickets, e-Apps, or using simplified underwriting, that may speed up the case life cycle time vs. a paper application or unnecessary full underwriting.

The Importance of Field Underwriting

Reducing the case cycle time means reducing the number of days the case stays in underwriting and getting it to issued and placed status. Depending on the case type and type of product, full underwriting may be necessary. It is each advisor's job to work as expeditiously and accurately as possible to reduce delays in the process. That being said, we are also not trying to submit a case to multiple carriers upfront in the hopes that a carrier will provide a favorable offer. You need to choose the carrier upfront wisely. As an example, if you attempt to submit an application with four carriers, this will severely impact your placement ratio. You may only choose one carrier's offer, and now you have only a 25% placement ratio.

You need to steer a case to the right carrier upfront, and that only happens by doing proper field underwriting upfront and working with financial professionals to get all the needed details from the applicant upfront - even if it is sensitive information. The more you know upfront, even if it is an unfavorable risk, this will work to your advantage down the road. If something is not disclosed upfront and gets uncovered by the underwriter later, that will not be looked upon positively.

HOW TO HELP PREPARE A CASE FOR A FAVORABLE OUTCOME:

FIELD UNDERWRITING BEST PRACTICES

The following are some general best practices for positioning and preparing a case in advance to help facilitate the best possible underwriting outcome. Cornerstone and the financial professional writing the case can often get business issued faster and maximize favorable outcomes by preparing a case correctly for the underwriter. Underwriters are looking to do all they can to help the advisor's secure coverage for a client. The goal is the same for all parties: to write good, sound business.

No one likes to say "no" when a "yes" is possible. There are times, however, when an underwriter cannot accept a risk or must come back with a table rating or flat extra to preserve the company's product and financial integrity. If you can improve an offer on a case by presenting it fully and correctly, it is certainly your job to do so.

There are many times that a full explanation can help an underwriter in their decision making. For example, if you know that financial justification of a business case will be difficult due to recent unusual happenings within the business, you should request a letter of explanation and justification from the business's financial officer. A company brochure or even newspaper articles about the company may be helpful to the underwriter in understanding the financial justification for a case.

The Importance of Field Underwriting

If you know a proposed insured always has high readings as part of their blood work-up, and that a physician has said these readings are of no concern to the client, you should get an APS letter from that physician early in the case to explain the situation to the underwriter.

To help place the "unusual" or "impaired risk" case, you must package the case carefully and thoughtfully. You might want to include a letter from the proposed insured describing self-care, lifestyle (exercise and diet), or even a photograph. On the other hand, it is up to you to know the underwriting standards of your carriers and to try to match the risk to the right carrier correctly. Sending an impaired risk case to a preferred risk carrier does not make good use of your time or the carrier's.

What if you are not sure if a proposed insured is appropriate for the insurance company or plan requested? Is the company competitive on this type of impairment? Are there any special requirements for this type of risk (a questionnaire or a special test)? If you have specific questions about a case, call or email your underwriter. All underwriters want to help assure that cases are submitted correctly- it avoids wasted effort on everyone's part.

Sometimes things happen while an underwriter is looking at a case. What if the case came in first as a trial inquiry, then a formal application was submitted because the company gave the best tentative quote? If the requirements end up showing the same things as outlined on the trial papers, the formal offer will generally be the same. If some of the facts are different, the formal offer could be better or worse than the tentative quote. Some negotiations would have to take place if the offer were worse. The applicant might be expecting one premium, for example, and get a much different one. If the final offer is more expensive than the original quote, the financial professional and their client are going to be upset and expect explanations. Advisors should temper tentative quotes with warnings that the quote may change as additional evidence is received.

Another way successful advisors work with their underwriters is by notifying the underwriters about what they need to prepare the case. If you know that the proposed insured will only accept a standard rating, then put that fact upfront on the summary sheet or in the discussion. If you know you need a premium below "X" dollars, let the underwriter know so they can do everything possible to meet that goal. Often the impaired risk company is not the first one to see a case. If your case is being shopped and you already have an offer for Table 2 and need to meet or beat that, let the underwriter know. The underwriter can more quickly see if they can compete with the prior quote (on a premium or rating basis) and thus help propel the case's momentum toward issue.

Another way to prepare the underwriter is to provide any information you have about how well the proposed insured takes care of themselves. Some cases do fall between ratings, and judgment calls must be used on the part of the underwriter. If the person is on a particular diet, give details. If they exercise regularly, provide details of how, when, and for how long. If, after reviewing all the medical evidence, the underwriter is still caught between two ratings, lifestyle factors may be enough to earn a better rating.

There is an industry story about how a writing agent always sent in a Polaroid snapshot/ photo of the proposed insured. This professional knew that every week an underwriter looks at hundreds of case files - cold facts, reports, and words - but the underwriter never sees who they are underwriting. A picture paints a thousand words. By adding a photograph of all his clients, the agent made his cases stand out in the pile. He added a bit of warmth and reality to what can be a cold, scientific process. We do not know if his placement rate was any better than anyone else's; we do know his cases were noticed.

The Importance of Field Underwriting

While many of the things that underwriters look at to determine insurance premiums cannot be changed, such as age or occupation, financial professionals can take steps to control a few things - like the proposed insured's preparation for a medical exam. They will want to avoid any chance that their client's health profile is not accurate because of a temporarily elevated blood pressure rate or eating a heavy, fatty meal the night before a required medical exam. Second, the financial professional needs to ask the client during their financial fact-finding process about pre-existing medical conditions or prior histories that could affect their health or lifestyle rating. Important aspects of risk identification that a financial professional should try to capture as part of field underwriting include:

- DIAGNOSIS - Diagnosis is one of the most vital parts of underwriting. A proposed insured may have a straightforward diagnosis such as high blood pressure or high cholesterol: other impairments may require more detail. Diabetes can be of different types - Type I and II, for example. Multiple Sclerosis may be Primary-Progressive or Relapsing-Remitting.
- ONSET OF A DIAGNOSIS - This is often an important part of underwriting rate assessment and must be collected. For example, diabetes, in part, is rated by how long an individual has had the disease.
- CANCER - This varies case by case. Underwriting cancer requires knowing more than just the general name and location of the disease. Pathology description, size, the exact type, and site of cancer are important factors in underwriting. For example, some cancers may require simple excision, while others may need additional treatment such as radiation and/or chemotherapy. This difference may affect the rate class. Underwriting a cancer diagnosis, past or present, can vary from carrier to carrier.
- SEVERITY - The severity of the impairment is important for accurate underwriting. It is acceptable for a financial professional to ask their client about the general perception of severity, but very important to ask for further details where possible. The clinical assessment of severity will depend on the impairment. For example, diabetes is evaluated primarily by glucose testing; sleep apnea largely by sleep study testing results; cancer by pathology report; etc. Financial professionals should ask clients if they are aware of recent test results that measure the severity and control of the impairment.

These questions may be uncomfortable for some financial professionals to ask, particularly if insurance planning is not their core expertise. However, it is far more difficult to deliver an unfavorable rating to a client if the client was not properly prepared or expectations were set too high by the financial professional. Fortunately, there are many formal tools to assist you in asking the right questions in advance. Among these tools are field underwriting questionnaires.

The Importance of Field Underwriting

UNDERWRITING QUESTIONNAIRES

As previously mentioned, supplemental information forms called underwriting questionnaires are used to uncover specific risks such as a proposed insured who has diabetes, asthma, cancer history, coronary history, or participates in unusual or high-risk professions or avocations, such as scuba diving, racing, skydiving, flying private planes, mining, etc.

It is a best practice to utilize underwriting questionnaires before submitting an application to a carrier if you are aware that the proposed insured has known risks. The answers to these questionnaires help you determine which carrier might best underwrite a case based on important details or known risks. They are an invaluable part of field underwriting, prior to formally submitting a case to a carrier. They help expedite the process by determining the severity of pre-existing risks and how, or if, to best shop a case for the most advantageous potential offers from carriers.

COVER LETTERS

Particularly with cases going through full underwriting, the best way to help secure an accurate underwriting rating and make the process smooth and efficient is to submit a cover letter along with the application. When a financial professional submits a cover letter with the application, it articulates the upfront facts about the applicant's situation. It provides a summary that helps elaborate on the applicant's circumstances. As many case managers will say to a financial professional, "if you can convince me, I can convince an underwriter." Explaining an applicant's life circumstances with solid information will always get the best results. Never be afraid to give too much information if it builds a stronger case. Underwriters are there to make judgment calls, so providing them with any and all pertinent information in a cover letter will be of great assistance.

Key components of a detailed cover letter should include:

- Who is the client/the proposed insured? What do you know about them? How long has the financial professional known them?
- Premium tolerance
- How the death benefit was determined
- Insurable interest, financial justification
- Occupation details, social habits, and activities
- Related applications and/or past and present insurance activity
- Sensitive factors that will impact underwriting: criminal history, alcohol, or drug use
- The underwriting offer desired or what was quoted
- Financial details for a buy-sell or key person business case

All of these components help the underwriter understand why the applicant is looking for insurance and why they should be considered for it.

INFORMAL INQUIRIES

Cornerstone has built its reputation on finding the most advantageous underwriting and product solution for a client. This often involves assessing underwriting offers from other carriers when an applicant may have a substandard, or impaired risk rating. Carriers that specialize in impaired risk underwriting can sometimes find coverage for an applicant who was rated or declined coverage by another carrier. This could be because the applicant had a medical condition, avocation, or financial situation that was highly rated or declined by another underwriter. The financial professional can come to Cornerstone and our partners for help with these tough cases. An advisor's response is important not only for that case, but for future business and referrals from that client.

Instead of filling out a formal application for Company A and waiting to see what offer, if any, that company might make (and maybe then going to Company B, then Company C looking for the best offer), Cornerstone and TruChoice will "shop" the case on an informal basis to one or more of its impaired risk carriers. Cornerstone and TruChoice provides information to the underwriting departments of several select carriers to determine what each company's offer might be if this case did come in as a formal application.

Informal inquiries are not just used when an underwriting offer was already declined by another carrier. In some cases, the financial professional may want to test the waters with a carrier prior to submitting a formal application for insurance. You may wish to informally discuss an applicant's potential underwriting rate class or circumstances, particularly when there are known risks. This allows you and your partners to determine if a proposed insured's situation might bring them a standard rating, or better, or determine if they will be substandard or table rated.

In short, informal inquiries allow you to review an applicant's risks or issues, prior to submitting an application. If the applicant has a likelihood of being rated, they may wish to make improvements in their lifestyle prior to submitting an application, especially if there are known issues that might have an adverse impact on their risk class. If the financial professional and client decide not to pursue coverage, you can simply withdraw the informal inquiry. This type of informal inquiry may help you best shop a case with the right carriers early on or make a preliminary determination that is in the client's best interest.

Note: An informal inquiry does not guarantee a specific underwriting class and does not bind any coverage or offer from a carrier. Although there are benefits to informal inquiries, if the client decides to hold off on insurance, they will not have the coverage they need. There are instances where you may want to submit an application with a binder to try and secure necessary coverage and not leave the client exposed by not having insurance coverage. In general, the carrier will require a formal form to be completed and HIPAA authorizations to initiate the inquiry.

GAINING PERSPECTIVE

A tentative quote is only as good as the information given to the insurance company. If the information on the formal application is different from that given during the trial process, the tentative quote will not hold. Also, note what makes a quote the "best" one. A quote is a combination of the underwriting rating, the products available, the insurance company itself, and the performance of the products. As such, the best quote is not always the one closest to a standard rating; you need to run illustrations to measure potential product performance. Only after these factors are examined can you decide what the best quote is. Again, quotes are always subject to current underwriting requirements.
